

Reports to the Commander

Ignatz reports:

The earth is a dry and barren planet. It is very hot in the daytime and cold at night. Only a few strange plants are growing here.

Schmaltz reports:

There is a cold, white, powdery substance falling from the sky. It piles up on the surface of the planet. There are no plants and no animals except for a huge, white furry creature. The extreme cold makes this planet uninhabitable.

Zerbats reports:

I cannot believe what a perfect planet this is for colonization. The abundance of vegetation and variety of animals would ensure a plentiful food supply. The temperature remains moderate for the planet's entire day.

Lorgatz reports:

There is no solid ground. The planet is composed of a liquid containing numerous salts, minerals, oxygen, and hydrogen. Many life forms and vegetation are supported inside the liquid. However, the cost of creating a suitable habitat capable of supporting a colony in this environment would be outrageous.
