Start making connections with Twitter

Twitter is an excellent way to build your Personal Learning Network (PLN) and make connections with educators around the globe. Once you take the first step and join Twitter, start following some great educators. See the document, Great Educators to Follow, in the Additional Resources section for recommended educators to follow. Also begin to connect with people who have similar interests, passions and visions. Not only will you stay informed by watching your Twitter feed, you can also contribute by tweeting your ideas, classroom events and questions from you or your students. As you become more comfortable tweeting, you can join Twitter chats to interact with engaged and passionate educators. The most successful way to build your PLN is tweet and interact with other educators. You can connect to work on projects together or increase your classroom collaboration. You never know what amazing opportunities are just a tweet away!
