

Learning with Laundry

Have fun doing the laundry together and practicing early science concepts.

What You Need:

dirty laundry	laundry additive
detergent	washing machine and clothes dryer

1 SORT Start your laundry process by sorting the clothes; darks, whites, brights. This is a great opportunity for younger children to learn about colors. After you have sorted your laundry, search the clothes for stains so you can treat them. When you find a stain, invite your child to talk about the story behind it — remember how much fun the soccer game was, or how yummy the ice cream cone was at the park.

2 LOAD Once the laundry has been sorted, invite your child to help load the machine. Ask, “What do you think we need to make sure the laundry gets clean?” Look at the laundry detergent and read the measuring instructions together. Let your child help you measure and pour. Since stains are sometimes overlooked, add a capful of in-wash stain remover product with a your detergent in your loads of laundry.

3 WASH Include your child in the process of selecting the settings for both the washing machine and the clothes dryer. Talk about what happens inside the machine: water filling, washing, rinsing. Ask your child to think about what happens to the detergent when the water goes into the machine, how the laundry gets clean, and where the water goes when the machine has stopped.

4 DRY Using the clothes dryer introduces children to important science concepts, such as observing changes, making predictions, and learning about heat. Ask your child to predict what will happen to the wet laundry when the clothes dryer is turned on. If the washing machine uses water to clean the laundry, what will the clothes dryer use to dry the laundry?

5 FOLD Children love to fold and sort the clean laundry. Once again they can practice sorting and classifying as they match socks, organize family members’ articles of clothing, distinguish size, color, and shape, and stimulate their sense of smell with the pleasant scent of clean laundry. Don’t forget to give a big hug and a thank-you for the wonderful help your child has provided in assisting with a very important household chore.
