Answer Key for Short Answer Question

The Pilgrims were grateful to the Native Americans for showing them survival skills, but they also had several other feelings toward them. What were these feelings? Use at least two details from the interviews to support your answer.

Details can include: fear they might be attacked, nervousness because some were not as friendly as others, they are very quiet people, they are friendly, they are not Christians and so Pilgrim children should not spend time with them, and they are better suited to this wild place than the Pilgrims.
