A Message from Richard Robinson

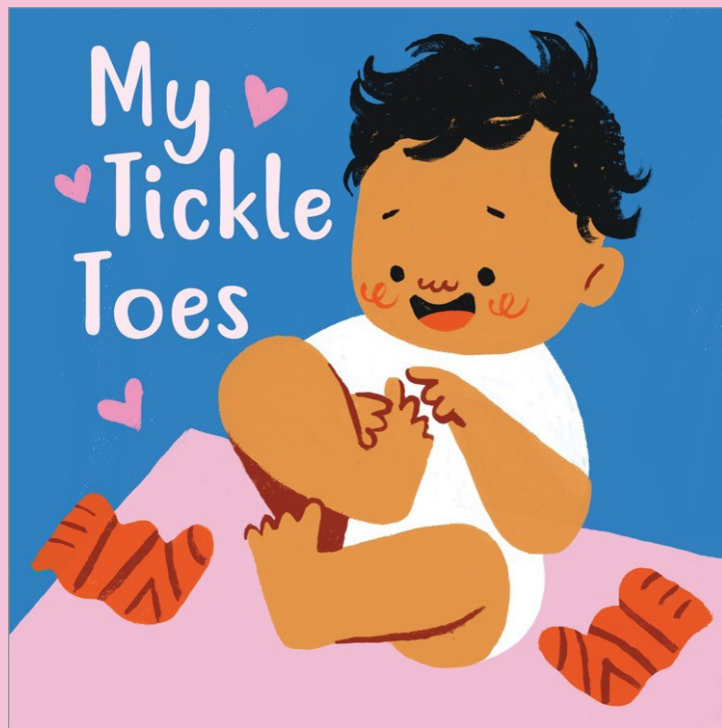

Chairman and CEO, Scholastic Inc.

Scholastic's mission is to help the individual child learn and grow. Through all of the books and magazines and learning programs we have published in 100 years, we have always worked to find that one touchpoint that will help each child want to learn more. To do that, we think about what that child is feeling, what their frame of reference is, what their hopes and aspirations are. Most of all, we try to reach the very heart of that child to understand what they will uniquely respond to, what will change the way they think about themselves and the world, and what will give them the courage and the skills they need to navigate their own future, and the future of the 21st century.

This is what all the people at Scholastic have done for the past 100 years, and will continue to do for the next years to come. We do this by working with teachers, parents, booksellers, schools and libraries, and the many partners who help us reach 50 million children almost every day with reading and learning, including our publishing colleagues from around the world.

The Bologna Book Fair is a pivotal moment in the Scholastic rights calendar and a wonderful opportunity to continue to come together to share the stories that will help children all around the world understand themselves better and live their best lives. In this centennial year, Scholastic is pleased to be with you in Bologna, and we thank you for sharing our 100th anniversary with us.
