Ron Edmonds once said, "We can, whenever we choose, teach all children whose schooling is of importance to us. We already know all we need to. Whether or not it occurs depends on how you feel about the fact it has not happened so far."

Students First: Working as a Team for Continuous Improvement

“How many effective schools would you have to see to be persuaded of the educability of all children? If your answer is more than one, then I submit that you have reasons of your own for preferring to believe that basic pupil performance derives from family background instead of school response to family background. Whether or not we will ever effectively teach the children of the poor is probably far more a matter of politics than of social science and that is as it should be.”

THE TEST

“If we as educators could successfully teach all children by ourselves, then it seems to me we would have already done so. The fact that we haven’t should be all the motivation or evidence we need that engaging every family in the educational life of his or her child is essential to desired school outcomes.”

(Constantino, 2016)

Children with richer home literacy environments demonstrate higher levels of reading knowledge and skills at kindergarten entry
(Nord, Lennon, Liu, & Chandler, 2000).

Parental involvement in their child's literacy practices is a more powerful force than other family background variables, such as social class, family size and level of parental education, while reading enjoyment is more important for children's educational success than their family's socio-economic status (Flouri & Buchanan, 2004, OECD, 2002).

A Story

On a cold January day, a forty-three-year-old man was sworn in as the chief executive of his country. By his side stood his predecessor, a famous general who, fifteen years earlier, had commanded his nation's armed forces in a war that resulted in the defeat of Germany. The young leader was raised in the Roman Catholic faith. He spent the next five hours watching parades in his honor and stayed up celebrating until three o'clock in the morning.
